Summary: Contacted both parties at the residence. Both parties were talking and there appeared to be no physical fight. I separated both parties and spoke one on one with each half. Both explained the other half is verbally abusive and they just don't get along anymore. The two got into an argument in the kitchen and the male half accidentally stepped on the female half's foot. The male fell down causing the female to fall with him. Both fell to the ground but sustained no injuries. Both refused medical. The area they were in is a small area with very little room for two people to be in, making it likely to step on ones foot by accident. The female was upset he stepped on her foot but said he did not push her. Both explained they argue often but are not physical toward one another. The two are going to counseling to try and solve their issues. Both parties said they would stay away from each other for the remainder of the day. I provided a domestic information letter to both parties to read over. I explained incidents like this commonly lead to more serious physical altercations and they need to try and work their problems out. The female half left the residence and the male half said he had work to do elsewhere and would not be home the rest of the day. I spoke with the son who lives next door and he said it was only a verbal argument. He said it is a regular occurrence. . Disposition: Log Note.
